The Social and Psychological Problems that Facing Talented Involved Students in the Middle Schools

Mohammed, Gomana (School: S.T.E.M. Luxor School)

People with special needs are a large part of society. Can't be overlooked. But they have a lot of problems in their lives. The social and psychological problems in particular that people with special needs are going through have an impact on their lives. Especially the talented ones . So I did a questionnaire with a number of talented integration students then I analyzed the results of this survey. I wanted to know the social and psychological problems and their impact on the talent of the integrated student and the role of the school and the family in influencing him. I found that the integrated students always feel frustrated if any negative criticism is directed towards them. It is also rare for their parents to constantly pursue their talents in addition to not actively participating in the school activity groups. Let us conclude from this that these problems have a negative impact on the growth of the talent of the student who is integrated with the interest of the family and the school in the academic side more. One of the proposed solutions is to allocate a day on the school radio. To increase their self-confidence and rely on interactive education, work in a team, and the state allocates a training program for parents of people with special needs to know their needs and the correct education methods to bring out a normal young man.
